Capital: Juneau Time: GMT - 9

Background: Sometimes known as the "Last Frontier", Alaska entered the Union on January 3, 1959, as the 49th state. The wild grandeur of the state has fascinated people for several hundred years. Its economy, traditionally dominated by the exploitation of natural resources, entered a new phase in 1977, when oil production began at the vast Prudhoe Bay oilfield on the Arctic coast. The name of the state is derived from an Aleut word meaning "mainland". Its major cities are Juneau (the capital), Anchorage, Fairbanks, Sitka, and Ketchikan.

Population: The population of Alaska is 634,892 (2001 estimate), an increase of 14 per cent since 1990. The average population density in 2000 was less than 1 person per 3 sq km (1 per sq mi), the lowest overall population density of any state. Whites made up 69.3 per cent of the population and blacks 3.5 per cent. Other major population groups (1990 figures) included some 44,401 Inuit, then amounting to 8.1 per cent of the total population; 31,245 Native Americans, then 5.7 per cent of the total; and 10,052 Aleut, then accounting for 1.8 per cent of the total.

Location: Alaska, one of the Pacific coast states, and the northernmost state of the United States, occupying the north-western extremity of North America. It is bordered on the north by the Arctic Ocean; on the east by Canada (the Yukon Territory and British Columbia); on the south-east, south, and south-west by the Pacific Ocean; and on the west by the Bering Sea, Bering Strait, and Arctic Ocean. The state includes two major island groups: the Aleutian Islands, which extend in an arc west from the south-western corner of the mainland, and the Alexander Archipelago, adjacent to the south-eastern coast of the mainland.

Area: With a total area of 1,593,438 sq km (615,230 sq mi), Alaska is the largest state in the United States, with an area equal to about one fifth of that of the contiguous 48 states. About 81 per cent of the land is owned by the federal government. The state is roughly square in shape with two major projections: the Alaska Peninsula, with its geographical extension, the Aleutian Islands; and the Panhandle, which extends from the south-eastern body of the state along the border of British Columbia, Canada. Its extreme dimensions are about 2,240 km (1,390 mi) from north to south and about 3,550 km (2,210 mi) from east to west. Alaska has the greatest relief range of any state; elevations begin at sea level and extend up to 6,194 m (20,320 ft) in Mount McKinley , the highest peak in North America. The approximate mean elevation is 580 m (1,900 ft). Alaska has about 8,980 km (5,580 mi) of shoreline on the Pacific Ocean and 1,706 km (1,060 mi) of shoreline on the Arctic Ocean.

Industries: Oil from the vast Prudhoe Bay oil field (via the Trans-Alaska Pipeline, opened in 1977) and natural gas are by far Alaska's most important mineral resources. Oil revenues have enabled the state to abolish its personal income tax and to distribute annual cash dividends to all state residents. However, oil production is now declining steadily, falling from a peak of 2 million barrels a day to 1.4 million in the mid-1990s as the Prudhoe Bay fields near depletion. In the early 1990s Alaska produced about 12.2 billion cu m (430 billion cu ft) of natural gas each year. Other minerals include copper, gold, coal, sand, molybdenum, gravel, stone, and clay. Forestry is important to the economy, the principal trees being western hemlock, Sitka spruce, cedar, and other softwoods, which are used for timber and paper-making. Fishing is also a thriving industry, with salmon accounting for a major share of the value of the annual catch. In the early 1990s the total catch in the state was 2.6 million tonnes, valued at US$1.6 billion. Farming accounts for less than 1 per cent of the annual gross state product. Greenhouse products, dairy products, potatoes and cattle dominate agricultural output. Leading manufacturing industries are food processing and fish-processing, timber and wood products, and printing and publishing.
