Capital: Sacramento Time: GMT - 8

Background: California entered the Union on September 9, 1850, as the 31st state. Agriculture and mining have always been important to the economy of California. Industrial activity expanded rapidly in the 20th century along with a booming population. By the 1990s California had a larger population than any other state and was the leading producer by value of both agricultural and manufactured goods. The name "California" was first given to the Baja California Peninsula by the Portuguese explorer Juan Rodríguez Cabrillo in 1542 and was applied by other explorers to more northern areas. The word is derived from the name of an imaginary island in a popular Spanish romance of the time. California is also known as the "Golden State". Its major cities are Sacramento (the capital), Los Angeles (the largest city), San Diego, San Francisco, San Jose, Long Beach, and Oakland.

Population: The population of California is 34,501,130 (2001 estimate), an increase of 13.8 per cent over 1990. It was the most populous state in the United States in 1990, when its average population density was 72 people per sq km (187 per sq mi). The 1990 census revealed a great diversity of ethnic and racial groups. Whites made up 69 per cent of the population and blacks 7.4 per cent; additional population groups included 731,685 people of Filipino background, 704,850 people of Chinese descent, 312,989 people of Japanese ancestry, 280,223 people of Vietnamese background, 259,941 people of Korean descent, and 236,078 Native Americans. A major component of California's population, especially in the south, were the 7,687,938 people of Latino (mainly Mexican) background, constituting about one out of every four people in the state.

Location: California, one of the Pacific Coast states of the United States, bordered on the north by Oregon, on the east by Nevada and Arizona, on the south by the Mexican state of Baja California, and on the west by the Pacific Ocean. The Colorado River forms the southern portion of the state's eastern border.

Area: With an area of 411,471 sq km (158,869 sq mi) California is the third-largest state in the United States (after Alaska and Texas); 44.5 per cent of the land area is owned by the federal government. The state most resembles an arc; its extreme dimensions are about 1,052 km (654 mi) from north to south and about 945 km (587 mi) from east to west. California has a great complexity of relief, with elevations from 86 m (282 ft) below sea level in Death Valley (the lowest point on the continent), to 4,418 m (14,494 ft), at the top of Mount Whitney, one of the highest peaks in the United States.

Industries: Despite depletion of reserves of gold, oil, natural gas, and mercury, California remains an important storehouse of minerals. Tungsten, borates, salt, oil, and natural gas are all present in significant quantities. Other important minerals include asbestos, sand, gravel, cement, borax, stone, iron ore, magnesium, silver, and gemstones.

In the mid-1990s California led all other states in agricultural output with farm sales of nearly US$21 billion. Leading crops are grapes, hay, cotton, sugar beet, potatoes, and rice, as well as an array of fruit, vegetables, and nuts, including tomatoes, lettuce, spinach, citrus fruit, peaches, apricots, and almonds. Livestock and livestock products such as dairy products, beef cattle, eggs, and chickens are also significant.
