Capital: Hartford Time: GMT - 5

Background: Known as the "Constitution State", because its delegates played a crucial role in drawing up the US Constitution at the Constitutional Convention of 1787, Connecticut entered the Union on January 9, 1788, as the fifth of the original 13 states. By the mid-19th century the state's economy was dominated by manufacturing, and Hartford, its capital, had become one of the chief centres of the US insurance industry. In the early 1990s Connecticut was particularly noted for producing aircraft engines, helicopters, submarines, and firearms. The state's name is derived from an Algonquian term probably meaning "beside the long tidal river", referring to the Connecticut River. Its major cities are Hartford, Bridgeport, New Haven, Waterbury, and Stamford.

Population: According to the 1990 census, Connecticut had 3,287,116 inhabitants, an increase of 5.8 per cent from 1980. The population estimate for 1997 was 3,269,858. The average population density in 1990 was 229 people per sq km (593 per sq mi), making Connecticut one of the most densely populated states in the United States. Whites made up 87 per cent of the population and blacks 8.3 per cent; additional groups included 11,755 people of Asian Indian ancestry, 11,082 people of Chinese extraction, 6,472 Native Americans, 5,160 people of Filipino descent, and 5,126 people of Korean background. Some 213,100 people were of Latino ancestry.

Location: Connecticut (state), southernmost of the New England states of the United States, bordered on the north by Massachusetts; on the east by Rhode Island; on the south by Long Island Sound; and on the west by New York State.

Area: With an area of 14,359 sq km (5,544 sq mi), Connecticut is the third-smallest state in the United States; 0.4 per cent of its land area is owned by the federal government. The state has a rectangular shape, and its extreme dimensions are about 163 km (101 mi) from east to west and about 117 km (73 mi) from north to south. The surface of Connecticut increases gradually from sea level along Long Island Sound, in the south, to a high point of 725 m (2,380 ft) in the north-west, on the southern slope of Mount Frissell. The mean elevation of the state is approximately 152 m (500 ft). Its coastline on Long Island Sound is 995 km (618 mi) long.

Industries: Connecticut's mineral deposits are limited, and include iron ore, copper, tungsten, lead, and silver. The principal minerals of economic value in the 1990s were stone, sand, gravel, lime, and clay.

Major agricultural products are chicken eggs, dairy products, beef cattle, hay, apples, vegetables, and tobacco. Fishing is of relatively little importance, although there is some oystering in Long Island Sound.

In the 1990s the leading industry in Connecticut was the manufacture of transport equipment, particularly aircraft (including helicopters), aircraft parts, ships, and submarines. Other leading industries included manufacture of precision instruments and industrial machinery; chemicals and pharmaceuticals; and fabricated metals, including small arms and hand tools.

Ports and Harbors: Black Rock Harbor, New Haven Harbor, Norwalk Harbor
