Capital: Baton Rouge Time: GMT – 6

Background: Louisiana entered the Union on April 30, 1812, as the 18th state. In 1861 it became a founding member of the Confederate States of America. The state economy was long dominated by agriculture. By the 1990s, however, exploitation of the state's vast oil and natural gas deposits had made Louisiana the second most important mineral-producing state in the United States. Tourism was a rapidly growing sector of the economy, and manufacturing was also important. The state's name derives from the former French territory lying west of the Mississippi River, which was named Louisiane by the French explorer René-Robert Cavalier, Sieur de La Salle, in honour of King Louis XIV. Louisiana is known as the "Pelican State". Its major cities are Baton Rouge (the capital), New Orleans, Shreveport, Lafayette, and Kenner.

Population: According to the 1990 census, Louisiana had 4,219,973 inhabitants, an increase of 0.3 per cent over 1980. The estimated population for 1997 was 4,351,769. The average population density in the mid-1990s was 33 people per sq km (85 per sq mi); the main population concentrations were in the northern and southern parts of the state. Whites made up 67.3 per cent of the population and blacks 30.8 per cent; additional population groups included some 18,361 Native Americans, 17,598 people of Vietnamese extraction, 5,430 people of Chinese descent, 5,083 people of Asian Indian background, and 3,731 people of Filipino origin. Approximately 93,000 people were of Latino background. The southern region of Louisiana contained much of the state's non-white population as well as such fairly distinct ethnic groups as the Creoles, descendants of early French and Spanish settlers, and the Cajuns, who trace their ancestry to the French-Canadian Acadians expelled from eastern Canada in the mid-18th century.

Location: Louisiana, one of the southern states of the United States, bordered on the north by Arkansas; on the east by Mississippi; on the south by the Gulf of Mexico; and on the west by Texas. The Mississippi River forms a portion of the eastern border, and the Sabine River forms much of the western border.

Area: Louisiana has an area of 128,593 sq km (49,650 sq mi); 4.2 per cent of the land area is owned by the federal government. The state is roughly L-shaped, and its extreme dimensions are about 440 km (275 mi) from north to south and about 480 km (300 mi) from east to west. Elevations range from 2.4 m (8 ft) below sea level at New Orleans to a maximum of only 163 m (535 ft) at the summit of Mount Driskill in the northern part of the state. The approximate mean elevation is 30 m (100 ft). Louisiana's coastline along the Gulf of Mexico is 639 km (397 mi) long.

Industries: Louisiana is extremely rich in mineral resources, of which oil and natural gas are by far the most important. The state is also the nation's largest producer of salt and is second in the production of sulphur. Other significant minerals include lime, high-silica glass sands, stone, gravel, and clay.

The principal agricultural crops are cotton, soya beans, rice, and sugar cane, although other farm products include hay, sweet potatoes, corn, sorghum, and horticultural crops.

There is a thriving forestry industry. Among the most important commercial tree species are southern pine, oak, ash, cypress, gum, cottonwood, and willow. Louisiana ranks among the leading states in yearly plywood production.

There are rich coastal and inland fishing waters, and although fishing accounts for less than 1 per cent of the annual gross state product, the annual catch (by weight) landed in Louisiana is greater than that of any other state except Alaska. More than three quarters of the catch is menhaden. Shrimp is the second-largest catch by volume but is first in value. Oysters and blue crabs are also significant.

Leading manufactured goods are chemicals and allied products, transport equipment, petroleum and coal products, paper and allied products, processed foods, and metals.
