Capital: Salt Lake City Time: GMT - 7

Background: Utah entered the Union on January 4, 1896, as the 45th state. From the time of its early settlement until the mid-20th century it was known primarily for its agricultural and mining industries. By the early 1990s, however, the state had developed a notably diversified economy, with a wide range of manufactured products. Tourism has also become a major element of the economy, and increasing numbers of visitors are attracted by the state's great scenic wonders. Utah is named after a Native American word meaning "mountaintop dwellers". Early European settlers mistakenly believed the word applied to the Ute people of the region. Utah's nickname is the "Beehive State". Its major cities are Salt Lake City (the capital), West Valley City, Provo, Sandy, and Orem.

Population: According to the 1990 census, Utah had 1,722,850 inhabitants, an increase of 17.9 per cent over 1980. In 1997 the population was estimated to be 2,059,148. The average population density in 1990 was 8 people per sq km (20 per sq mi). The major area of population concentration was in the northern part of the state. Whites made up 93.8 per cent of the population and blacks 0.7 per cent. Additional population groups included 24,093 Native Americans (1.4 per cent), mostly members of the Navajo, Ute, Gosiute, or Shoshone groups; 6,500 people of Japanese background; 5,322 people of Chinese descent; 2,797 people of Vietnamese extraction; and 2,629 people of Korean ancestry. Approximately 84,600 people were of Latino background.

Location: Utah, one of the western states of the United States, bordered on the north by Idaho; on the north-east by Wyoming; on the east by Colorado; on the south by Arizona; and on the west by Nevada.

Area: Utah has an area of 219,902 sq km (84,904 sq mi); 60 per cent of the land area is owned by the federal government. The state is in the shape of a rectangle lacking its upper right-hand corner; its extreme dimensions are about 555 km (345 mi) from north to south and about 446 km (277 mi) from east to west. Elevations range from 610 m (2,000 ft) along Beaverdam Creek in the extreme south-west to 4,123 m (13,528 ft) at the top of Kings Peak in the Uinta Mountains of the north-east. The approximate mean elevation is 1,859 m (6,100 ft).

Industries: Copper is the most important mineral produced by the state, but Utah is also among the nation's top producers of gold and silver. Other significant minerals include coal, lead, zinc, petroleum, stone, sand and gravel, clays, fluorspar, gypsum, magnesium, mercury, molybdenum, potash, uranium, salt, vanadium, and the raw materials for cement.

Farming accounts for 1.4 per cent of the annual gross state product. Leading agricultural commodities are wheat, hay, dairy farming, beef cattle, sheep, and poultry. Manufacturing accounts for about 16 per cent of the annual gross state product. Leading products include industrial machinery, transport equipment, precision instruments, processed foods, and electronic goods.
